BRITISH WOMEN DO VALUABLE WORK AS CARPENTERS BEHIND THE LINES

Girls from all ranks of society have joined this women's army. They are here seen building an extension to their workshop. Thru the summer months they work out of doors.

Members of the Queen Mary Army Auxiliary Corps do all kinds of useful work behind the lines. Some hundreds of British women have responded to the call for carpenters. Here is a group taken at their workshop.

Women overseas inspect the work, and heavy tasks are undertaken as cheerfully as the light ones.

Who said a woman could not use a hammer? This staunch-looking hut was constructed solely of old boxes and packing cases, in which supplies have been sent to the front.

Finishing up a window frame for one of the huts. Girls take keen enjoyment in the work.

Planning out and constructing the sides of a wooden hut. Conservation in wood is one of the chief thoughts at this camp, the girls turning out wonderful work from discarded boxes.

Assembling all the skeleton parts of the framework, doorways, window frames, etc., all of which have been made by the women carpenters, preparatory to the building of a new hut.

HARVESTING TIMBER, EAST AND NORTH, IN LUMBER CAMPS OF CANADA

Getting ready for the big drive. A huge pile of logs just waiting to be sent down the stream. This picture was taken on the upper part of Lake Huron, and includes about six million feet of lumber.

Decking a skidway. Logs are placed in this way until snow comes, when they are hauled to the waterway until the ice breaks and they can be floated to the mill.

The Ottawa River, with its many picturesque bends and scenes, has numerous lumber mills upon its banks. Here is a modern saw mill not far from the Capital City.

Lumber camps are generally situated by the side of a lake or river, where quick transport of the logs may be made. This is a corner of a camp on the Vermilion River.

A drive on its way, showing thousands of logs rounding a picturesque bend in the river. The river drivers are behind gathering up straggling logs, while others scatter up and down to prevent jams on the route.

Cutting a tree into logs. The man on the right with long pole determines how the tree will cut up to the best advantage, and marks it for the saw men.

Mrs. Herman, with her corps of thirteen nurses, who helped to sw ell the funds of the campaign in aid of merchan. seamen durin; navy week. Taken by the side of the advertising ship.

Private Winterton of Orangeville, now overseas, ha. been twice wounded.

The gallant crew of the ship which was launched on the city ha ll lawn, Toronto, during navy week. Mrs. Simmons is seen w h the Navy League girls of No. 1 branch. In centre, Francis Hartley, son of Rev. F. Hartley.
